Alibis Essays On Elsewhere Andre

"Alibis: Essays on Elsewhere" is very similar in tone. It's beautifully written, and in each essay he conveys feelings of longing, lost, love, nostalgia. My favorite is the first chapter where he explores the scent of lavender and the significance of colognes in his life.

Alibis: Essays on Elsewhere by André Aciman

"Now and then . . . we are offered a reading experience that reminds us of the gold standard in literature, and one such book is Alibis: Essays on Elsewhere by André Aciman . . . he shares with Proust an ability to plumb the depths of memory and meaning in the observed details of ordinary life . . . Aciman resolves the contradictions that he embodies—'This feeling of being cut off from oneself or of being in two places at the same time'—with a simple credo: 'Art is nothing more ...

In some ways, this is a good essay collection to read while one is stuck at home. Throughout the essays, the author is focused on elsewhere, often wanting to be elsewhere, imagining elsewhere, sometimes thinking of places' past and his own past as connected (or disconnected) to place.

"Maddening though this habit of searching for displaced selves might be in a traveling companion—the word 'alibi' literally means 'elsewhere'—it is a pleasure in an essayist. While the roll call of places visited by Mr. Aciman is unexceptional, his angle on them is anything but, since his weakness for traveling 'in search of lost time' opens up telescoping possibilities of reverie and speculation.

So it was that I opened Aciman's Alibis: Essays on Elsewhere, which begins with the simple claim that "Life begins somewhere with the scent of lavender." From there, Aciman, as if a docent in his own "scent museum," meditates on a single fragrance—which, as a child, he encountered in the smell of his father's aftershave, then ...
