This is a relatively short book about Marxist philosophy. It is not a book about "elementary principles of philosophy", as its title suggests. I found it really interesting, for it is the first time I find something readable about dialectic materialism, although I must say I didn't find it convincing.

the question is to point out that philosophy is derived from the Greek word meaning 'love of wisdom'. However, this is rather vague and even less helpful than saying that philosophy is what philoso-phers do. So some very general comments about what philosophy is are needed. Philosophy is an activity: it is a way of thinking about certain sorts
