Horace Mann, a pioneer of American public schools in the 19th century, famously called education the “great equalizer of the conditions of men.” But the inverse is also true. Students who receive a poor education, or who drop out of school before graduating, can end up on the wrong side of a lifelong gap in employment, earnings, even life expectancy.

Death is the great equalizer. It is no respecter of persons. It comes to everyone. And according to the Bible, after death there are two destinations. You decide now-not later, not after death-which destination it will be. You decide where you will spend eternity. And the two options are heaven or hell.
