Psychology And Capitalism The Manipulation

Dr. Roberts briefly discusses psychology's history as a science developed by the elite who had become uneasy about the rapidly urbanizing spaces of early capitalism. We learn how modern day psychology's obsessive focus on internal thoughts and behaviors has reinforced the capitalist ethic of selfish individualism.

Since the capitalist system did not exist 400 years ago it seems nonsensical that it is reflective of normal psychology. Many "pathologies" result from systemic forces rather than the individual being wrong. In placing shifting the blame away from the system and onto the individual capitalism rescues itself from criticism.

Psychological manipulation is a type of social influence that aims to change the behavior or perception of others through indirect, deceptive, or underhanded tactics. By advancing the interests of the manipulator, often at another's expense, such methods could be considered exploitative and devious. Social influence is not necessarily negative. For example, people such as friends, family and doctors, can try to persuade to change clearly unhelpful habits and behaviors. Social influence is genera
