It is difficult to imagine how Euribor futures could ever become negatively correlated to each other but as is often with risk, reality can be stranger than theory. This happened once in my trading lifetime in 1999 due to a phenomenon subsequently called the millennium fly. This was when the Z0 (December 2000) futures sold off sharply (implied forward rates increased since stir futures are quoted on a 100-r basis) whilst the adjacent U9 (Sept 1999) and H1 (March 2001) contracts continued a ...
