Generally, criminal law is the action of the state to punish the individual. A straightforward description is that a tort is a 'wrong'. The law of tort protects certain interests of the individual. If those interests are affected in anyway a tort action can be pursued under civil law.

The Aims of the Law of Tort

Generally, torts are not defined within specific statutes or legislation and have evolved through judge-made law, or common law. However, each state has also created statutes to override the common law, especially in the areas of negligence, personal injuries and defamation, where that has proven necessary.
