We recently launched our second edition of The Startup Playbook with Wiley and Techstars after selling out of the first printing. The book's title is Founder-to-Founder - can you say more about that? Rajat Bhargava: There are too many books out there that founders read that aren't from a founder's perspective. They are written by VCs, lawyers, accountants, investors, etc., and we've always felt that their input was from their perspective in the startup ecosystem, but not a founder's.
