No: in a non-theistic context, they mean the same thing. We can stop debating because there is no substantive debate: this is a case of what philosophers call "a distinction without a difference." We are extraordinary animals -- the most complex genus of the primate order in the mammalian class of animals.

Humans vs. Other Animals: Why Are We Still Debating ...

There's no question that Americans love both dogs and cats. About 48 percent of households in the U.S. own dogs and 38 percent own cats. That's according to the American Pet Products Association. But one thing many people can't agree on is which animal makes a better pet. Cat lovers say their pets are easier to care for than dogs.
